

Jaime Windon believes in saying yes – as a result, she has traveled with purpose across the globe, living and working in both large cities and remote villages – from Washington, DC, to London, to Lamu Island, Kenya, and countless places in between.

Her titles, to date, include: bartender, freelancer, journalist, teacher, photographer, innkeeper, storyteller, and currently, town commissioner and distillery owner.

Actively involved in both local & state government, Jaime is finishing her first term as commissioner, and seeking re-election to continue serving the community in which she lives and works. A Maryland native, and resident of town for the last 7 years, she originally came to St Michaels as a tourist over 30 years ago. Having lived overseas prior to returning to Maryland, she put down roots in St. Michaels and launched the first true grain to glass spirits distillery in the state in over 40 years. Growing Lyon Distilling Co. into a successful, dynamic company in the last five years is one of her proudest accomplishments, and St. Michaels is one of her favorite places to call home.

No matter what part of the world or area of business she is working in, her focus is always on empowering people and giving back. A relentless advocate for change and progress that benefits small business owners, and empowers entrepreneurs, she is a proud disruptor of the status quo, and an active participant in local organizations.

Jaime loves to laugh almost as much as she loves to learn, and approaches every issue with an open mind and generous spirit.

She is committed to maintaining the authentic integrity of St. Michaels, while preserving the town as a truly remarkable, safe place to live, a welcoming and attractive place to visit, and thriving, vibrant place to do business.
